Police say auto burglary hard to combat

By RICHARD PERAZA
Staff Writer

Upland police are no happier with city automobile burglaries and vandalism than victims of the crimes and officers are doing all they can to cut down on them, according to Chief Coy Estes.

"Auto burglary is one of the hardest crimes to clear," Estes said, answering complaints from residents in the 800 block of North Campus Avenue who say the alley behind their apartment carports has become a drive-thru for thieves and vandals.

Estes said it's tough to gather enough evidence to convict auto burglars unless they're caught in the act. "Most of the burglaries occur in cars parked in carports during early morning or late evening hours. Nobody's around so it's not reported until several hours later," Estes said.

"Some of the people — even the juveniles — committing these crimes are fairly sophisticated in not leaving fingerprints," he said. "In 99 percent of the cases there are no prints available to lift."

"Most cars can be opened with a coat hanger," Estes said. He said an experienced thief can be inside a car and have it hotwired "in a matter of minutes."

There are lots of places to hide in carports and even if a burglar is found, it's tough to arrest him just for being there unless there are signs that a car has been tampered with, according to Estes.

"Usually the way people are apprehended is an officer will drive through while the burglary is in progress," he said. "Other times they'll (officers) stop a car for some other violation and find stolen property in back, then match it to a crime."

The result is auto burglaries are a growing problem everywhere, Estes said. Last year there were 95 throughout the city, so far this year there have been 116, he said. According to Estes, eight of those cases have been "cleared" (property recovered and/or persons arrested) but no figures are easily available on convictions.

Estes said the troubled neighborhood on North Campus, which has about 100 parking spaces and carports facing an alley behind the street, has reported 11 petty thefts, nine cases of malicious mischief and one stolen car since January.

"Any open carport area is a very high target area for burglars," Estes said. "This area, 800 N. Campus, is not the worst area in town. There are other areas where the rate is five or six times higher."

The police chief said residents themselves can help cut down on their problem or at least make it tougher for thieves — just by locking their cars. Of the 11 petty thefts of property from inside cars in the North Campus neighborhood, six were from cars left unlocked, he said.

Estes said troubled areas like the North Campus neighborhood are given extra heavy police patrols but police are too short staffed to stake an area out for long periods of time. Heavy patrols mean an officer will drive through the area and inspect it five or six times between sunset and sunrise.

Estes said he's not surprised residents complain that police are rarely seen making the extra patrols because headlights are often turned off. "If they can see them (patrols), burglars can see them too. A person can be burglarizing a car and hear or see a policeman coming. They can hide in the carport and it's physically impossible to search every inch of those carports."

Estes said residents are wrong when they say no arrests have been made in the alley; two have been made since January. They were for possession of marijuana, curfew violation and being drunk in public, Estes said.

He stressed it's hard to arrest for burglary unless suspects are caught in the act. "Officers on patrol observed these individuals and arrested them for a different crime while they were preparing to burglarize," he said.

Estes said the most success in curbing burglaries of all types comes from the Neighborhood Watch program. That program will be suggested to residents on North Campus, he said.

"We're not encouraging people to go out and confront anybody, just to observe and report to us when something's wrong," he said.

"What we'll try to do is get together with the apartment managers and set up meetings with the tenants, tell them what to look for and at the same time keep our extra heavy patrols in the area," Estes said. "It takes a team approach. The police can't do it by themselves and the residents can't do it by themselves."

Upland's city employees awarded 10% increases

Upland city employees were granted 10 percent raises at Monday night's council meeting, as plans for the 1980-81 budget and salary negotiations drew to a close.

The raise, effective retroactively to the first of the month, includes fire and police personnel, and workers in city hall, the library, city yards and other areas.

Meet-and-confer sessions regarding the salaries of police management and management-level positions in city hall are still pending.

The final city budget of $17.9 million was also adopted at the meeting, following a series of public hearings in June.

Employees will receive an additional $15 per month towards health insurance plans, bringing the city's total contribution to $30 per month.

The memorandum of understanding between the city and employees includes an increase in holiday pay, and, effective Jan. 1, 1981, 3.5 percent of the employee contribution to the Public Employees' Retirement System will be paid by the city.

Police officers and agents will receive an additional $80 per year toward the uniform allowance, bringing the total to $200 per year for each individual.

Probationary policy for the police department will also be adjusted, according to the agreement. The 18-month probationary period will remain for all new officers, but may be reduced to 12 months at the chief's discretion for individuals who have some background and academy work. The probationary period for transfers will be 12 months.

Both police and fire personnel will receive education incentive pay in addition to a regular salaries.

The contract for members of the Service Employees International Union (SEIU) is expected to be ratified by the membership in a meeting tonight.

Approval of the 1980-81 budget was removed from the consent calendar to allow Upland resident Jean Schwabe to express her concerns regarding lack of public parks in the city.

Schwabe collected more than 100 signatures on a petition requesting the council to complete Greenbelt Park in the northern sector of the city, and designate more funds to be used for the establishment and maintenance of public parks.

She said that the northern part of the city, in particular, suffers a scarcity of park area for the population.

Council members thanked Schwabe for addressing the matter, but said the issue should have been brought up during public hearings on the budget held in June.

They indicated a willingness to discuss the matter with her on a personal basis, but that it was too late to change funding for the parks.

Analyst, information officer nixed

Board opposes hiring proposal

In a split vote Tuesday, Upland School District trustees turned down an offer to join other districts in hiring a legislative analyst/public information officer.

The idea was first proposed by members of the Alta Loma School District board of trustees in February to insure that smaller districts may have a voice in education legislation.

The original emphasis toward lobbying activities changed somewhat to duties that include informing local educators and communities of pertinent legislation, interpreting those actions, and serving in a public relations capacity.

Board members Rick Minnis, Barry Brandt and Robert Ellis opposed joining in the consortium, expressing concern over hiring an individual whose primary responsibility would be politically oriented.

"I have trouble with the philosophy of the whole thing," Minnis told the other trustees. "I see it as an expansion of bureaucracy with no real explanation."

"I think we have people in our central office to translate (proposed legislation) for us."

Minnis added that he thought it was board members' responsibility to help educate the public and become more active in protecting the interests of the district.

Board President Dina Hunter, who joined Dale Andersen in voting for the proposal, pointed out that the post did not call for an advocate or lobbyist, but "someone in our communities teaching more people to become involved with Sacramento."

She said it was "simple to say" that board members should bear the responsibility of providing information to legislators but argued that it wasn't being done.

Andersen expressed concern that with increased funding and control coming from the state level since Proposition 13, it becomes "a necessity" to have a position such as the legislative analyst/public information officer.

4 West End residents on grand jury

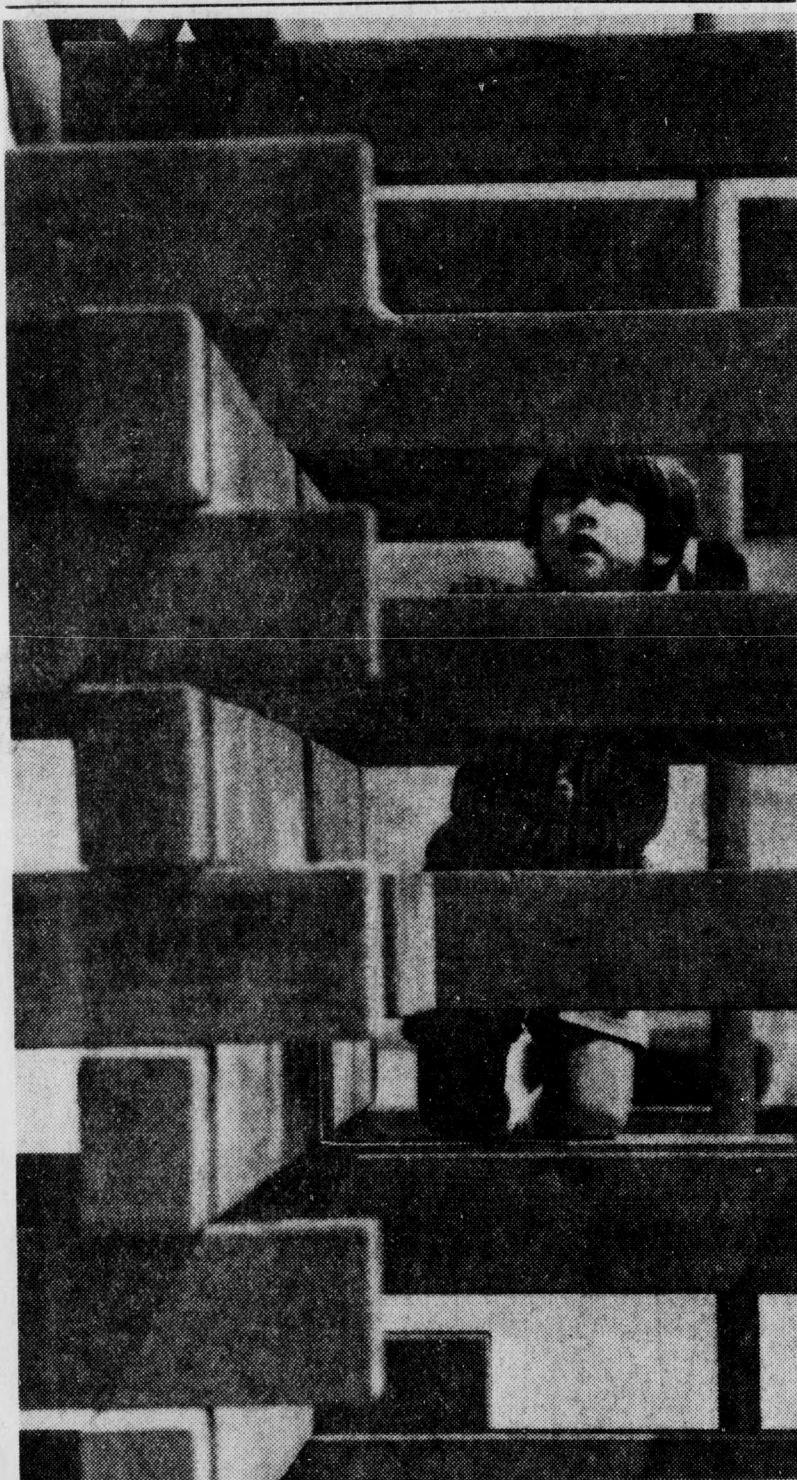

A former trustee of the Ontario-Montclair School District and three other West End residents were among the 19 jurors sworn in recently as new members of the county grand jury.

Sam DiGiovanni, 55, of Montclair, the former school board member, was one of four West End residents selected for one-year terms by the Superior Court judges.

Joining DiGiovanni on the grand jury is Donald George, 65, of Upland. George retired from Southern California Edison Co. in 1976. He began with the utility company as a meter reader and was an assistant analyst when he retired.

Edward Hamilton Jr., 70, was one of two Rancho Cucamonga residents selected. He is a retired Superior Court clerk.

Llaird Hudson, 57, of Rancho Cucamonga spent 25 years with the California Highway Patrol and is now a citrus rancher.

Trevor Nishihira, 3, of Alta Loma, is finding that one of the benefits of youth is that often when he feels caged in all he has to do is climb out of a piece of playground equipment. Trevor discovered an interesting wooden version of the classic monkey bars to climb at Upland Youth Soccer Park recently. Solving his problem of getting out was easier than his sister's that day — after playing in the park she had a dental appointment. (Staff photo by Tom Tondee)

Paramedics will put an end to 'Puff'

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Members of Paramedics Upland Fire Fighters (PUFF) unanimously agreed Wednesday night to disband their committee, following defeat of the public paramedics measure in the April municipal election.

Committee Chairman Rene Biane said all other avenues of action had been investigated and that the only real option open to the group was to wait for the next election when the measure could again be put before the residents of Upland.

"When that time comes, PUFF may re-form or perhaps another group may take over," he said following the meeting.

PUFF was the driving force behind the public paramedics issue in Upland. The measure had to pass by a two-thirds majority, and missed by about seven percent of the vote, roughly 400 votes shy of the required amount.

Biane said that difference could have been made up if a campaign brochure scheduled to come out before absentee ballots were cast had not been misissued.

"The brochure was released before it could be proof-read by me, and several errors slipped through."

"As a result, we didn't distribute (the brochure)," he said. "I think if we had been able to get that out, the absentee ballots would have been enough to carry the vote."

The ballot measure called for a city-operated paramedic service which would be funded through a service fee tacked on to residents' water bills.

The monthly fee was not to exceed $1.50 per unit, or household, with a yearly cost of living adjustment.

Biane added that the economic climate at the time of the election may have also hurt the paramedics movement.

"The economy was tightening up, people were concerned with austerity, and even if they thought the paramedics were a good idea, they figured 'not another penny out of my pocket.'"

"It's a shame."

Upland cable TV service rapped

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

A vocal group of Upland residents received support from the City Council Monday in their fight to get improved service from a local cable television firm.

The council required representatives of the company to report back in September to detail changes that were made to improve the system. In action with even more bite, however, the council authorized city staff to investigate means of enforcing the provision of adequate service, including possible revocation of the firm's franchise.

The complaints were leveled against Upland Enterprises, which was granted the cable franchise roughly a year ago. Residents said reception on the cable system was undependable, often with many or all of the channels completely inoperable.

"In the last year, the quality of reception has ranged from poor to non-existent," said Don Adey, one of several residents of Deborah Way who addressed the council.

"We have received no response to our complaints, and they evidently disregard messages left concerning problems over the weekends."

The group of about 10 people also said the company consistently sends past due notices to customers, regardless of whether bills had been paid or not.

C.V. Wismar, vice president of marketing for Acton CATV of Acton, Mass., flew in from the East Coast to help trouble-shoot the problems in Upland.

The firm was hired by Upland Enterprises in October to manage the cable television system.

Wismar told the council plans have been made to renovate the local service.

"The system in Upland needs to be rebuilt," he said. "It's in terrible shape — obsolete."

Upland passes condo measure

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Upland's new condominium ordinance is now on the books, after receiving virtually no public input at the city council's final session on the issue Monday night.

The council passed the legislation unanimously, with Councilman Frank Carpenter on vacation.

The amendment replaces an existing chapter in the city's municipal code, detailing specific requirements for the building of condominiums and the conversion of apartment houses into condominiums.

The ordinance has survived a heated incubation period of nine months as it was tossed from the planning commission to the council, to a special committee, and back again to thrash out problems in the legislation.

No citizens appeared for the final public hearing on the fourth draft, which was adopted by the council. Two individuals, however, did address the council later in the evening, having missed the hearing.

Harvey L. Schwartz, a developer and owner of an apartment building, said the ordinance discouraged the construction of condominiums in high density areas. The legislation limits condos to 15 units per acre in multiple zones, which allow 12 or substantially more units per acre.

Councilwoman Ina Petokas pointed out the intent of the ordinance is to encourage developers to continue building rental units within the city for families who cannot afford to buy a home.

The ordinance officially deals with planned residential developments, a category that includes not only condominiums but other one-family dwellings that combine individual and communal interest, such as cluster subdivisions, community apartments and townhouses.

Local interest in such an ordinance was sparked last October when the council imposed a four-month moratorium on conversions to allow time to develop an amendment that reflected city policy. Guidelines were drawn from standards set in the 27 planned residential developments already approved by the city, reflecting what officials termed a "low average" of the amenities provided in the existing developments.

Some of the more controversial aspects of the ordinance were tempered in the fourth draft, with revisions suggested by a special committee comprised of representatives of the building industry, city staff and the Upland Chamber of Commerce.

One compromise made was a sliding scale for required minimum sizes and number of parking spaces required for each unit.

Projects in single-family zones must be a minimum of 1,000 square feet for dwellings with one or less bedrooms, plus an additional 200 square feet for each additional bedroom.

Those in multiple-family must have a minimum floor area of 900 square feet, with a similar increase of 200 square feet for each additional bedroom.

Each unit is also required to have two enclosed parking spaces per unit, plus an additional two open or covered spaces in single-family zones.

The two enclosed spaces will be augmented by 5 spaces per bedroom in multiple-family zones. Thus, a two-bedroom condominium in a multiple-family zone must have two enclosed and one additional parking space.

The same unit in a single-family zone must have four parking spaces.

The ordinance will be read at the next two regularly scheduled council meetings, and is expected to be officially enacted by the first part of September.

40 people graduate

Chaffey awards EMT diplomas

Chaffey College recently awarded 40 students the California certification as Emergency Medical Technicians - 1A.

To earn the certification, the new EMTs had to complete more than one hundred and twenty hours of intensive emergency medical care training consisting of classroom instruction in anatomy, physiology, heart diseases, cardiopulmonary resuscitation, trauma, sudden child birth and burn care; also included was rigorous practical skills testing in bandaging, splinting, C.P.R., accident scene evaluation and management plus the certification of patients from wrecked automobiles.

In addition, the students were required to work in the emergency department of a hospital and accompany ambulance crews on emergency calls. The certification allows the new EMTs to work as technicians in an emergency department or as crew members on ambulances. The EMT-1A certification is also required by most fire departments or rescue agencies for initial employment.

Instructor Jack Schnurr, a paramedic with the L.A. County Fire Department, had nothing but praise for the new graduates, stating, "They have worked extremely hard to achieve a high degree of proficiency in their new skills. The group, as a whole, scored higher on their final tests than any previous group with which I have been associated. I am very proud of them."

There was a sad note to the certification celebration, however. Schnurr noted that the EMT program had been cancelled at Chaffey due to a budget deficit. He said that despite appeals from local rescue groups, fire departments, ambulances agencies and other concerned citizens, the board of trustees canceled the EMT training program and decided to send prospective EMT students to other community colleges.

Students taking the final exam for the emergency medical technician certification at Chaffey College aid an automobile crash "victim." Martin Alcorn and Curtis Parker aid Vern Vieau in the "crashed" car, 40 persons passed the course which will be the final one offered at the college due to budget cuts.

For industry

Firm developing 89 acres in area

More than 120 business, civic, political and real estate leaders from the Inland Empire have welcomed West Coast industrial development firm, O'Donnell, Brigham & Partners, as a new participant in the growth of San Bernardino County. The luncheon/reception was held in the main dining room of the Red Hill Country Club in Rancho Cucamonga.

Speaking to the assembled gathering, William Blair Armstrong, resident partner in charge of Southern California operations for O'Donnell, Brigham & Partners, said that his company is currently involved in the development of 89 acres of industrial property in the area.

"We are currently developing a 73-acre, $20 million industrial park at the corner of Milliken and Sixth Avenue in Rancho Cucamonga," he said. "Additionally, we are approximately six weeks away from completing a 16-acre industrial complex adjacent to the Pomona Freeway in Ontario. This latter project, which has a total of 254,000 feet of space, is being built at a cost of approximately $9.3 million," he said.

Armstrong said that the Ontario Airport Industrial Center, as the development is known, has already sold four of its 13 structures, or a total of 52,500 feet for an approximate price of $2 million.

"We have a number of other buildings in the project currently in negotiation, and expect all the facilities to be sold by the end of the summer. Phase I of the Rancho Cucamonga industrial park will have a total of 300,000 square feet in seven separate buildings," Armstrong continued, "and all of these will be for lease as manufacturing, distribution or research and development facilities."

O'Donnell, Brigham & Partners, with headquarters in Newport Beach, is currently developing more than $100 million worth of industrial facilities in the greater Seaside area, San Jose, San Rafael, Irvine and San Bernardino and Riverside counties. The company controls more than 4.5 million square feet of industrial space in the Western United States and Alaska.

'Hadassah's crowning achievement is the Hadassah Medic Center, a modern healing complex in the Middle East, which cares for Jew and non-Jew alike,' a spokeswoman noted. The philosophy and work of Hadassah also revolve around achievements in educational programs, study groups and involvement on the American scene through its American affairs committee.

Sharon Chapter draws its membership from the area from San Dimas to Etiwanda, including

Cuban refugee family finds freedom in Upland

By MARGE GROSS
Staff Writer

To live in "the land of the free, and home of the brave" is the ultimate dream of oppressed people throughout the world.

In December of 1979, St. Mark's Episcopal Church in Upland sponsored the Chum Peang family of Cambodia. They were set up in a small Upland house. The parish members donated furnishings.

The father, mother and three children were free, but not happy because they were lonesome for people who speak their own tongue. In May, it was decided the Chum Peangs should be relocated in a small Cambodian settlement in Hacienda Heights.

The Upland house was no sooner vacated, furniture and all, by the Cambodians when St. Mark's was asked to harbor a refugee Cuban family — mother and father, both 19, their four-month old baby girl, and the father's brother, 9.

Dick and Murray DuVall, chairmen of the church's refugee resettlement committee, started their work all over again. Furnishings for the little house were donated by parishoners and friends of the parish.

The door of the little house, the church door and the hearts of those at St. Mark's opened once again — this time for Jorge and Maria Estrada, their pretty baby, Yurezquys, and Ricardo. Hopefully, Jorge's mother, still in Cuba, will join them in Upland eventually.

The Estradas are Castilian or "white Cuban" and speak Spanish but no English. During an interview with the family, Mona Currie and Mrs. DuVall made valiant efforts to translate the questions asked of Jorge and Maria. "The inflections of their Spanish is not what we are used to," Ms. Currie said. "They tend to drop the ends of words so it makes it difficult to understand them."

Jorge said they left Cuba because of "bad treatment and not enough to eat." He said if one is stopped without his or her papers, the individual is thrown in jail. Jorge's father was in prison for 8 or 9 years due to his politics. When Jorge was 13, he was a political prisoner sentenced to six years behind bars. He was released after two years "for good behavior."

Jorge said all who had been in prison could leave Cuba, but once they made up their mind, "there was no turning back." Jorge said, "Castro emptied the jails of political prisoners to go to the United States."

After an overnight, eight-hour trip in a shrimp boat jammed with people, the Estradas set foot on United States soil. Their sponsorship was through the Church World Service and the Refugee and Immigration Center of St. Anselm Episcopal Church, Garden Grove.

When the young family arrived in Upland, the DuValls welcomed them into their home for a week while the little house was being furnished. Dr. and Mrs. DuVall took them to the immigration center and spent six hours filling out papers. "It was the most dehumanizing experience I have even witnessed," Mrs. DuVall said.

Jorge was a forklift operator, and Maria was a typist in Cuba. He hopes to find odd jobs soon, and Maria would like to do housework. Since they were given $50 each upon arrival in the United States, Jorge immediately bought an inexpensive watch. He is proud of the time piece since he couldn't afford one in Cuba — they sell for $200.

The young couple had mixed emotions about leaving their relatives, but they "had to get away from Cuba." Jorge is anxious to send proof of their prosperity back to his mother, particularly photographs.

He was upset when the boat guards took his mother's photograph away from him and cut it up with a bayonet.

Maria likes the peace and quiet of Upland. She also is amazed at the cleanliness of the markets. "In my whole life I have never gone to clean stores like this," she said. Since they did not have refrigeration, they had to shop daily. It costs 2,000 pesos or $6,000 for an electric refrigerator in Cuba.

Jorge said, "The soldiers live well. They have cars, air conditioning, everything." As he nervously talked, he kept fondling his new watch.

Maria held her pretty baby, peacefully asleep.

"It's better we are here," she said. "We have no friends but we find some. No, we never go back to Cuba. Jorge would be shot."

The youngster, Ricardo, would be considered a revolutionary if he returned home. He would be put on a work farm, Jorge said.

Whatever an individual earns in Cuba, Mrs. Currie translated from Jorge's statement, one half goes to Fidel Castro. Permission is needed to do any sort of work, even shining shoes. "You must have a license to have a party in your own home," she said.

The Estradas aren't planning any parties at their Upland home for awhile, but there's no doubt they will make friends.

The Estrada family fled from Cuba to Florida and has been relocated in Upland under the sponsoring wing of St. Mark's Episcopal Church. Jorge and Maria, both 19, proudly show off their daughter, Yurezquys, 4 months old, and Jorge's brother, Ricardo, 9, in front of their new home. The Estradas are among 109,000 Cubans to recently flee the dictatorship of Fidel Castro. (Staff photo by Marge Gross)

R.C. man observes changes at West Point

By JIM MARXEN
Staff Writer

Female students may not be the most significant change at West Point in the past 50 years but to one Rancho Cucamonga resident, female cadets are a visual reminder that things have changed on the 178-year-old campus.

As a member of the school's class of 1930, retired Col. Dana Alexander, 74, attended his 50th reunion last month and observed the changes that West Point has undergone.

In addition to female cadets, Alexander observed changes in the school's dress and discipline codes.

The school's uniforms are more comfortable, but haircuts are no longer required and discipline is not as strong as it was 50 years ago, he said.

Alexander, however, does not agree with the decision to open West Point to women.

"Personally, I would have preferred a separate academy for them," he said.

Of the 914 graduates this year, 62 are women. The group includes the first women to ever graduate from the institution that produced Robert E. Lee, Douglas MacArthur and Dwight D. Eisenhower.

"Most of my classmates didn't think it has affected the image of the academy," Alexander said. "I don't know how the general public feels about it, but the top brass back there feels it's a success. That doesn't mean they favor it, though."

Another change, he said, is the amount of "hazing" new cadets must undergo. Elevated to an art at West Point, hazing just isn't what it used to be, Alexander said.

"It's still popular but it's eased up. During my first year there, we had to double time everywhere we went outside our rooms.

"In the mess hall, you had to sit on the end of your chair and you were not allowed to look around."

As a contrast to the comfortable dorm rooms of today, the class of 1930 dedicated to the school a replica of a room as it would have looked during the first part of the century.

The room is sparsely furnished and contains only the barest of necessities.

Alexander's association with the school began in 1924 when, as a high school student in Yakima, Wash., he saw a movie on academy life.

"I went home from the movie and said to my folks and my brother that I was going to West Point. They just laughed and said I had about as much chance as going to the moon."

Alexander read about the school and asked his congressman for a nomination.

"He told me he had 57 other candidates on his list so he couldn't give me much hope."

"I then got in touch with all his political backers and friends and I got them to write me letters of recommendation."

"In the fall of 1925, I received a letter stating I had been appointed first alternate and was instructed to report to Washington State for the entrance exams."

The congressman's first selection failed the exams and, in May of the following year, Alexander was appointed.

Of the 241 cadets who graduated with him in 1930, 124 are still alive and 102 showed up for the reunion. Fifty of those who died were killed in World War II.

After graduation, Alexander was detailed into the Army Air Corps and was eventually stationed in California. During the war, he helped train future officers.

He obtained a teaching certificate after he retired in 1960 and for the next 25 years was a physics teacher at Chaffey College.

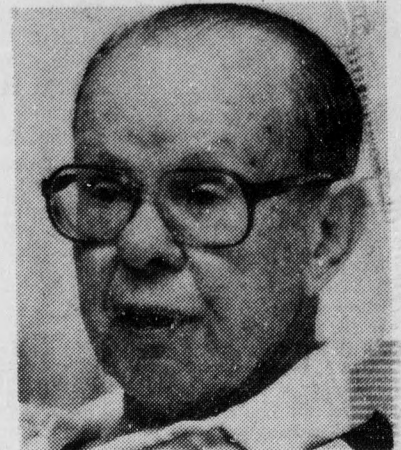

He and his wife Marion have traveled through 49 countries on four continents and recently returned from a trip to mainland China.

Following in his father's footsteps, Alexander's son graduated from West Point in 1957.

Alexander has fond memories of his school experiences.

"Those were four of the toughest years of my life," he said. "But they were also some of the most memorable years."

"Those four years seemed very long but the 50 years since seem shorter. It seems like it was just a few months ago that I was standing on the school's parade ground as a student."

Col. Dana Alexander

Cucamonga student scores improving

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Cucamonga School District trustees are heartened by a steady upward trend in student test scores, but still want to see average scores brought up to grade level and the national norm.

Results of the Comprehensive Test of Basic Skills (CTBS), administered in May, were released to the board. Students in kindergarten through grade three appear to be holding their own, but the other grades in the district fall consistently below performance levels expected in the standardized test.

There has been, however, consistent improvement at all grade levels, and trustees have commended the three school principals and their staffs for the progress made.

Kindergarten students rose an average of 23 percentile points above the average score in each of seven skills areas rated by the test.

Despite the positive performance, Cucamonga School Principal Lloyd Dowell said teachers have expressed interest in replacing the test with a language concepts test, more appropriate for youngsters who have not yet learned basic skills needed to take the other test. Dowell did point out that teachers spent extra time this year coaching students on taking the CTBS.

In grades one through three, students performed well above expected grade levels in reading, language and math, with the exception of second grade reading. Here, students were rated about three months behind the level they should be at the end of the school year.

Students in the upper grade levels appeared to show greater discrepancies between expected and actual performance.

Fourth graders were three months behind in reading, five months behind in arithmetic; fifth graders were four months behind in reading and one month ahead in arithmetic; and sixth graders were eight months behind in reading and five months behind in arithmetic.

Skills, however, have been steadily improving over the past years, and Superintendent Chris Arce hopes to continue that trend with the recent hiring of a new school psychologist, Diana Brockett.

Brockett will begin next fall, and Arce hopes she will be able to identify some of the learning problems in the district, and means of solving or working with those problems.

At the junior high level, students again have been steadily improving, but still do not quite meet national standards for their level in reading and language.

They performed much better than average, however, in math.

Seventh graders were rated six months behind in reading, one year and one month behind in language skills, but five months ahead of expected levels in math.

Eighth graders are one year behind in reading and language, and three months ahead in math.

Summertime is chicken barbecue time

The backyard barbecue is always popular at this time of year but with inflation and energy shortages keeping more people close to home the grill might well become the center of this summer's activities.

Cooking chicken outdoors instead of expensive red meats can mean real savings. According to the National Broiler Council, chicken thighs and drumsticks are especially good buys now. They are in abundant supply and both are ideal for barbecuing on the grill.

Like all chicken, these parts are rich in protein but low in calories and in fat content. The dark meat is especially moist and is preferred by many chicken lovers. It is compatible with most other foods and adapts well to a variety of seasonings so you can create many pleasing combinations when you cook thighs and drumsticks outdoors. They're good finger foods, too — ideal for informal eating.

Barbecuing chicken should be a leisurely process, savored and enjoyed but never hurried. The aroma of chicken cooking on the grill is tantalizing and will whet the appetite, so start the fire well in advance of serving to allow time for proper cooking. Once the chicken starts to cook, the chef should remain nearby to turn and baste it to perfection.

Charcoal makes a hot fire; space the coals so no two touch and wait until it's ash-covered (about 30 minutes) before beginning to cook. The rack should be 6 to 8 inches from the heat. Place the chicken on the grill skin side up and turn every 3 to 5 minutes for even cooking. It takes about an hour to cook chicken on the grill, depending on size and thickness of the pieces.

Chicken thighs are in good supply now and are an especially good buy at the meat market, according to the National Broiler Council. They're great for outdoor cooking, whether for a family meal or economical entertaining.

Use your favorite barbecue sauce and baste the thighs as they cook on the grill. Or bone them and produce a truly elegant treat, such as "Poulet Mignon" (below). Simple to prepare with a minimum of ingredients, it's a truly different dish that will appeal even to chicken lovers who usually eat only white meat.

Poulet Mignon
8 broiler - fryer chicken thighs, boned*
8 slices (about 2" x 3") mozzarella cheese

8 strips thick bacon
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper

On flat surface, place boned chicken thigh, skin-side down. Place cheese slice inside thigh, gently wrapping thigh around cheese. Check to be sure cheese is tightly enclosed; secure with food pick. Attach one end of bacon strip to food pick and wrap remainder of bacon around thigh several times. Secure with 6" wood or metal skewer, penetrating through entire mignon. Repeat for all thighs. Place thighs on grill, skin side up, 6-8 inches from heat. Turn about 3-5 minutes for even cooking. Grill for about 40-45 minutes, or until fork can be inserted in chicken with ease. Remove chicken from grill; add salt and pepper. Makes 4 servings.

* To bone chicken, simply place thigh on cutting board, skin-side down, and cut along this side, joint to joint. Holding one end of bone, cut meat from one joint; then pull or scrape meat from bone. Cut meat from opposite joint.

Finalists getting ready for Chicken Cook-off

Fifty-one finalists, one from each state and the District of Columbia, have been selected from thousands of recipes entered in the 1980 National Chicken Cooking Contest and contestants are getting ready for the giant cook-off August 6 in Atlanta, Georgia.

A total of $20,000 in prizes awaits five winners in the 32nd annual event to be held at the Georgia World Congress Center. The cook preparing this year's best chicken recipe will take home $10,000 as the first place winner.

Each national finalist will receive an expense-paid, three-day trip to the Georgia capital. Events there will include a night out of "Gone With The Wind" at the historic Fox Theatre and an Awards Banquet at the Omni International Hotel, contest headquarters.

'Spring chickens' now enjoyed year round

There was a time when "spring chickens" meant just that. The young, tender birds were rare, seasonal and far too costly for the average family.

It wasn't until after World War II that pioneers in today's multi-billion-dollar broiler industry began experimenting with ways to produce and market a fryer chicken to meet the demands for July 4th picnics. Fried chicken was considered a status symbol for the Fourth.

Some say the modern broiler industry began in 1923 when a Mrs. Steele grew a flock of about 200 chickens on her Delaware farm. The first carload of "spring fryers" went to New York in 1926 and sold for a $1.13 a pound.

Broiler - fryer chickens are now the world's most economical source of protein ... not only for July 4th picnics but for everyday fare throughout the year.

If you cook chicken on the outdoor grill and do not plan to serve it immediately when it's done, the National Broiler Council advises wrapping it in foil or placing it in an insulated container. This will not only keep the chicken warm but will preserve the natural moisture and tenderness.

When there's no time to light up the grill, the National Broiler Council suggests barbecuing chicken in the microwave oven. It takes only about 6 minutes per pound to cook chicken in the microwave and barbecue sauces are readily absorbed, flavoring the chicken. In summer, the microwave doesn't heat up the kitchen. Clean-up is at a minimum, too, because chicken can be cooked in the serving dish.

Fried chicken is America's favorite picnic food. It's good either hot or cold. If you plan to serve cold fried chicken, the National Broiler Council advises cooling it in the refrigerator rather than at room temperature. Put it in an ice chest or insulated container if you're traveling a long distance or if you don't plan to eat for some time.

Hormone may be key to fighting crippling disease

By VERNE PALMER
Copley News Service

Anyone who has ever attempted to manage a budget is undoubtedly familiar with the practice of "robbing Peter to pay Paul."

In other words, diverting money from one account to another to meet a more pressing need.

Few, however, may be aware that the body can be forced to practice this same kind of expediency in order to survive.

The result of at least one such occurrence of this nature is osteoporosis, a chronic bone-thinning disease which affects approximately 20 million Americans.

Half of American women over the age of 60 today suffer from this crippling disorder, according to Dr. Hector F. DeLuca, chairman of the department of biochemistry at the University of Wisconsin.

DeLuca, discoverer of a hormone which may one day be to osteoporosis what the Salk vaccine is to polio, said osteoporosis is the result of one of a number of dysfunctions resulting in insufficient absorption of calcium.

Ninety-nine percent of body calcium is locked into the skeleton. It has to be there in order for the body to maintain the well-calcified bone structure we need to survive in our particular environment.

And yet, the most critical function of calcium is performed by the remaining 1 percent which enables nerves and muscles to function properly.

If an adequate supply of calcium is not supplied through normal body processes, it will be stolen from the skeleton and passed through the blood to nerve and muscle tissue.

The result of this transfer is a steady drain on bone calcium, leading to a progressive shrinking and weakening of the bones.

Tragically, there is no test for such a deficiency, DeLuca says, and a broken bone is often the first indication of a problem.

The hormone discovered by DeLuca and his research team in the mid-1960s, is 1,25-dihydroxy vitamin D-3, the final form of vitamin D which is initially absorbed by the body.

It is this hormone's function to trigger the release of calcium from the intestines and bones and to aid in its absorption into the bloodstream.

Vitamin D absorbed by the body is first acted upon by the liver and then by the kidney, where it is then stored in hormone form until released by a message from the parathyroid gland, whose job it is to monitor calcium levels in the bloodstream.

It's a very complicated system, DeLuca says, and a breakdown can occur at any one of a number of points along the way.

Some people are genetically unable to convert vitamin D into hormone form and others suffer from kidney dysfunction or removal of the parathyroid.

Old people, post-menopausal women and patients undergoing steroid treatment suffer from inadequate vitamin D hormone levels.

The importance of DeLuca's discovery to all of these groups lies in the ability to bypass the system and provide the hormone directly in amounts needed by the body.

The hormone, produced commercially as Rocaltrol, is currently approved for use in patients with chronic kidney failure and vitamin D-resistant rickets.

Studies are currently under way at the Mayo Clinic to determine the most effective method of treatment and dosage levels for treating osteoporosis and DeLuca believes the hormone will be approved for this usage within the next four to five years.

One study has already been completed on a group of post-menopausal women suffering from compressed vertebrae, fractures, opaque bones and other clear indicators of osteoporosis.

Results showed that women treated with a placebo continued to lose 60 milligrams of calcium per day while those treated with the vitamin D hormone returned to a positive balance or at the very least achieved a less negative balance.

"After menopause," DeLuca explains, "absorption of calcium from the intestine drops and in post-menopausal women with osteoporosis, it is 30 percent less than normal."

Food poisoning summer threat

Ants aren't the greatest hazard at a festive summer picnic — food poisoning is, according to Susan Kennedy, R.D., and president-elect of the California Dietetic Association (CDA).

"And anyone who has contracted food poisoning with the resultant nausea, vomiting, cramps, diarrhea, and sometimes chills and fever, knows it's no picnic," she says.

"Summer picnic menus generally follow good nutrition guidelines, offering selections from all four food groups — milk, meat, vegetables and fruits, and breads and cereals," says Kennedy.

"Just handle those foods properly, and there won't be a problem." While there are numerous and complex organisms capable of causing food poisoning, for picnickers there are only a few simple food handling rules to remember in order to avoid it.

"The old rule — keep hot things hot and cold things cold — is especially important on a warm summer day," Kennedy says.

"Creamy foods such as potato salad, a traditional picnic dish, have always been notorious carriers of food-borne disease," she says. "But in the past few years, precooked roast beef has become the number one culprit."

It took one martini to tip over cigarette smoker

By FRANK RHOADES
Copley News Service

TRUE CONFESSION: Have you ever known a person who got re-hooked on cigarettes after five years of total abstinence?

His struggle to quit again is a harrowing experience indeed.

The roadblock is his own intellectual dishonesty. I am hooked again, all because of a martini, one lousy, little martini.

I am not blaming the smokers with whom I associate, but they did play a role. Unintentionally. They mistakenly assumed I was strong enough to resist any thought of lighting one of their cigarettes.

I wish they had been right. I wish I had enough character not to slip back into an old habit. It is obvious I don't. But I try — oh, how I am trying. In my own dishonest way. It goes like this:

I get up in the morning and I am sure I've got it whipped.

Things will be like they were for five years and three months.

I am a free man again. That's what I tell myself. Early in the morning.

Then I go to the office where I start reassuring myself say: "Everything is going to be fine today. You'll have no desire for a cigarette."

I start answering the night's phone calls. Talking and taking notes. The tempo of the day rises and I fidget. I feel something is missing. But I stick to my guns. I say, "I don't want to smoke."

Then a little voice, somewhere out there, says: "The hell you don't. You are crazy for a cigarette right now."

Then I reply: "I'll bet you I could smoke one cigarette and never again touch another one. Just let me show you."

Out in the newsroom is a desk which some reporter leaves a package of Marlboros when he or she goes home for the night. I found out about it shortly after I went back to smoking two weeks ago. I was rummaging through desk drawers looking for matches.

I tell the little voice: "I am going to smoke one of those Marlboros and prove I can smoke only one and quit again."

I take one of the Marlboros from the pack left behind by the Unknown Smoker. I feel calmer, merely by feeling it in my hand.

Back to my desk in the glass office. I light up. I take one drag, then another. Then a third, and back comes the old feeling, one that always came with the day's first cigarette.

I feel that all my vitality suddenly has been drained. I have a slight soreness in my right shoulder. Nicotine constricting the small blood carriers. I get a bad hunch for a reason I never was able to understand. Something terrible is going to happen today.

But all this vanishes as quickly as it came on. All of it except the familiar old rattling in my chest. That and an awful feeling of remorse.

What would my wife say if she knew I was again addicted? I can imagine. After I quit five years ago, I reproved her until she quit, too. She says it's the greatest thing I ever did for her.

Up to now, I have gone next door to the home of John Thomas to do my smoking at night. The Thomases broke the habit three years ago but they have kept my secret.

(I would not go to the next-door neighbors, Mike and Barbara Fornes. They weathered the trauma of quitting — it took four attempts — and now Mike, a medical doctor, makes small speeches on the evils of smoking. He, no doubt, would throw me out of the house if I came there to smoke.)

I smoke the one misappropriated Marlboro (stolen is such a dreadful word) and before long I want another one.

"Well," I tell myself resignedly, "you are a loser today, so why not go to the machine and buy a package? I mean one LAST pack."

Another strange thing: I have not touched a drop of liquor since the martini that got me into trouble. The little voice says: "Quit looking for a scapegoat. You are smoking again because you are a weakling."

I tell the little voice: "Mind your own damn business. I've just been horsing around with cigarettes. I am going to quit smoking forever."

"Just as soon as I finish these Salems. It would be a shame to waste them."

22,000 set for MSAC fall semester

More than 22,000 students are expected to enroll in the 35th fall semester when Mt. San Antonio College opens its doors again on Sept. 8. That's a big jump over the first year's 600 students in 1946, and is more than the enrollment in the college's first 10 years.

More than 2,300 class sections will be offered during the registration period from Aug. 13 to Sept. 3. Applications will be accepted until Sept. 3 and may be obtained by mail by calling the admissions and records office, 714-594-5611, extension 415.

Classes are open to all residents of the MSAC District, which includes Baldwin Park, Bassett, Charter Oak, Covina, Diamond Bar, Hacienda Heights, Industry, Irwindale, La Puente, La Verne, Pomona, Rowland Heights, San Dimas, Valinda, Walnut, and West Covina.

Students from 18 to 80-plus have been enrolled at the college as the trend toward lifelong education grows. The average age on campus this year is 27, which means there are a lot of 40-, 50- and 60-year-olds taking classes to refresh their knowledge in their current career fields, or train for a new occupation, work toward that degree they started a long time ago but never quite completed. Many students of all ages are also returning to the classrooms just because they want to, to learn more about themselves, more about the world around them, more about the store of man's knowledge which literally increases 100 percent each year.

Course subjects range from accounting and computer science, English and speech arts, aeronautics and metals technology, to agricultural sciences and mathematics, history and psychology, to physical education and respiratory therapy.

Classes will also be available at two satellite campuses: Edgewood High School, West Covina, and Bonita High School, La Verne.

Information on deadlines, majors, counseling, and classes is available by calling the MSAC "Quickline," 594-5611, extension 528.

Bill Turner, director of development at Webb School in Claremont, poses with his plane, "Miss Los Angeles," a replica of the Brown B-2

Now owns replicas of great aircraft

'Golden Age' of flying recalled

By PEGGY OLSEN
Staff Writer

Bill Turner, a small boy in 1931, watched excitedly as a pilot skillfully executed rolls and turns, then dove toward the ground, causing alarmed spectators to "hit the dust" before completing an impromptu exhibition at Cleveland Airport in Ohio.

The pilot, a veteran World War I Navy aviator, was William Turner, Bill's father.

"That was the first time I saw my father fly. I recall it vividly," said Turner, now a resident of Claremont.

It was that "immersion into early aviation" that led to Turner's interest in early racing planes and eventually prompted him to commission construction of replicas of the Gee Bee Z and the Brown B-2 racer.

Turner, who described his experiences to the Pomona Valley Pilot's Association at Brackett Field in La Verne, said he "returned the planes so the public can watch them fly — feel the excitement of the era they represent."

The Gee Bee, a super sportster, made its debut at the National Air Races in 1931 and "rocked the world of aviation," Turner said. The plane, the first to fly faster than 300 mph, accomplished a feat unequalled before or since when it won five major events in one week.

The Gee Bee, Turner said, "made obsolete every other aircraft and opened the eyes of legislators and military strategists."

The forerunner of World War II

Navy fighters, the Gee Bee "changed abruptly" military strategy, explained Turner, who flew the naval aircraft as an officer during that war.

The five Granville brothers of Springfield, Mass., envisioned the design for the innovative plane. They tested their concepts in "a backyard operation" and eventually sought the aid of engineer Bill Hall "who made those concepts workable," said Turner.

He added that Hall later joined Grumman Aircraft Co. to pioneer the World War II Navy fighters.

With the advent of the Gee Bee, the world of aviation "took a tremendous leap." The Granville brothers' aircraft had a significant effect on aviation as it exists today, Turner said.

The original Gee Bee crashed only five months after it was built "in a fluke accident," Turner explained. His replica was completed in 1978 by Ed Marquart of Riverside.

There were no designs of the original plane in existence. But Marquart, whom Turner describes as "some-what of a genius," drafted plans by using photographs owned by the Granville brothers. He also received some technical assistance from Hall.

The replica Gee Bee is now on loan to the Crawford Aircraft Museum in Cleveland.

Marquart, with Turner providing the "mental labor," also built the replica of the Brown B-2 racer, dubbed "Miss Los Angeles."

The original, built in 1934, was a light aircraft that could speedily maneuver the pylons in a closed-course race, Turner said.

Not a "pleasure to fly," both of Turner's replica aircraft are "demanding and unforgiving." He once landed "Miss Los Angeles" at 95 mph only to discover he had no brakes. The plane flipped over and sustained substantial damage. Turner was seriously injured. Both, however, "are now restored" and continue to fly.

Turner, who serves on the board of trustees of the Experimental Aircraft Association and is a member of the Antique Airplane Association, assisted in raising funds for the building of a replica of Charles Lindbergh's "Spirit of St. Louis." In 1977, he was one of six pilots who flew the aircraft along "Lindy's triumphal route" in the United States.

TRAVELING WITH YOUR PET

Traveling is stressful for many pets — especially cats, so unless your animal enjoys traveling, or it is absolutely necessary to take him, he would probably be better off at home.

If you are going to travel with your pet plan ahead! Consult one of our hospitals about needed immunizations and state travel requirements. State and federal parks will not allow dogs without rabies certificates to enter the park. Some states require health certificates for animals to enter the state.

If you travel by car make sure your pet has some type of identification tag on and is properly restrained. Cats should travel in escape proof carriers, and dogs and cats should be leashed when out of the car. Cats are excellent at escaping and may be hard or impossible to catch once they have gotten away.

Make sure you don't leave your pet in the car on a warm day. The inside of a car can heat up rapidly and death from heatstroke can occur in a very short time.

If you plan to stay in motels obtain a list of the ones which will allow pets. Some animals may need to be tranquilized on a trip. One of our veterinarians will be happy to advise you about this — just be sure and follow the directions carefully.

The crumbled banks and vehicle tracks in a wash near Borrego Springs show the impact as man as well as nature on the fragile desert.

The desert has become a recreational mecca for millions — a place of escape for many people.

Desert changing

Wilderness torn by conflicting uses

By MIKE RICHMOND
Copley News Service

For years, the vast California desert lay sweltering in its reputation as a grim and lifeless place fit only for jackrabbits and snakes.

Cross-country travelers went into it with only one goal: to get out again.

Today, however, the wasteland is a recreational mecca for millions — a place of escape for diverse users including wilderness lovers, off-road vehicle enthusiasts, backpackers, rockhounds and others.

Big businesses, such as utilities and mining firms, have discovered the wealth and depth of its resources. The recent influx of divergent interests has made the desert a battleground of conflicting uses, and a just-released preliminary draft of a land-use plan for the California desert is likely to spark the tinder.

Should the ORVs, for example, have more space and more roads in the desert?

Of should more areas be designated as wilderness tracts, with all motorized vehicles banned?

The proposals were released by the U.S. Bureau of Land Management.

The draft plan includes four alternate management proposals. These proposals range from one of no management action to one that embraces a list of strict limits on activities in the desert.

Other than the no-action plan, the alternatives "are workable and legally possible," said BLM Director Frank Gregg.

A comparison of the three workable alternatives reveals significant differences.

— The protection plan provides for 108 wilderness areas totaling 5.2 million acres. Six sections with 93,000 acres are proposed for off-road motorized vehicles. No point-to-point cross-country competitive events would be allowed.

— The use alternative provides six wilderness areas adding to 602,000 acres. Twenty areas of more than 1.3 million acres would be open to ORVs. Utility corridors would total 28 and energy-plant siting would be virtually unlimited.

— The balance-use alternative provides 39 wilderness areas of about 1.8 million acres, with 13 areas totaling 289,000 acres open for ORVs. Twenty utility-transmission corridors are shown.

The federal government has blamed off-road vehicles for damaging some desert areas. Some formerly vegetated areas are completely denuded, for example, and nearly all desert intaglios have been scarred.

Intaglios, considered the rarest form of prehistoric art, are geometric designs or human and animal figures scraped into the hard desert surface thousands of years ago.

Federal geologist Howard Wilshire of the U.S. Geological Survey estimates that ORVs have scarred 1 million acres of public land in the California desert in less than 20 years.

"By comparison, it took strip miners a century and a half to orphan 2 million acres of land across the entire country," says another federal report.

The 436-page draft plan will be followed by a final plan to be issued by Sept. 30. The region covered is 25 million acres, and the plan would be directly applicable to the 12.5 million acres administered by the BLM. It is expected to guide the use and management of the desert for 20 years.

Sierra Club spokesman Frank Norris of San Diego says the draft plan "is a disaster."

He said the various options for wilderness designations "didn't even come close to the total wilderness areas that had been studied in the planning process."

Norris also says the number of power-plant sites envisioned, in comparison with the state's future growth, is unrealistic.

The ORV users are also unhappy with portions of the plan.

Even the so-called "balanced use" alternative favors limits on motorized travel, said David MacPherson, the California Association of 4-Wheel Drive Clubs' chairman for use on BLM land.

MacPherson, of Riverside, said ORVs favor trimming some wilderness areas in the northern desert and creating more such areas in other sections.

While a number of routes are open to off-road users, he added, "We still need areas where we can travel across country."

County fair fixes entry deadline

Deadline for entries in the Dairy Products Department at the Los Angeles County Fair in Pomona has been set for Sept. 1, announced Dick Foellmer, the department's chairman.

Areas open to competition are fluid milk, butter, cheese, cultured products, and ice cream. The milk producer's division deadline was May 15.

Milk producers accounted for 252 entries in last year's competition and were awarded 114 medals in recognition of their skill in producing top quality milk, said Foellmer.

Winning entries in all categories will be exhibited during the fair, Sept. 26 through Oct. 12.

Ground-bound cockpits provide crisis training

By KEN HUDSON
Copley News Service

DALLAS — Thick fog hung over the airport at Waco, Texas, and Archie Boyin and F.A. Kahrs concentrated on trying to spot the runway lights.

When the American Airlines B-727 was about 200 feet off the ground on the instrument landing approach, Boyin elected to abandon the attempted landing and go around again for a second try.

Moments after he pushed the throttles forward to full power to regain altitude, a loud clanging bell alarm sounded and Engineer Douglas Chandler yelled, "Fire in No. 3 engine!"

They started a programmed series of steps to put out the fire, shut down the blazing engine, adjust the aircraft to operate on the two remaining engines and prepared for an emergency landing.

They didn't land, however. The jetliner was returned to the situation it faced on the first landing approach, with all engines going and no fire.

Of course, this wasn't a real flight. It was done in one of more than a dozen multimillion-dollar electronically sophisticated simulators at the American Airlines Flight Training Academy here that recreate flight conditions to minute details visually, motionwise and mechanically.

It was realistic in virtually every detail, including the bumps and banks and noise that occur in an aircraft when actually flying in such a situation.

Realism in the simulators is so accurate that the Federal Aviation Administration is on the brink of allowing pilots to take over flight crew duties without any actual training in the cockpit.

Sound scary? It shouldn't. Simulator-trained pilots go through situations that can never be duplicated in the cockpits of a real airplane, explained Capt. Walter W. Estridge, director of flight training here.

In the case of Boyin and Kahrs, for example, there is no way that a fire can be realistically reproduced in a real training flight aboard a 727.

In actual on-board aircraft training, the instructors can't even shut down an engine completely to give a pilot experience in handling such an event — it's too dangerous, said Estridge.

In a simulator it can be done over and over and over again without danger to anyone.

Before the end of this year (some say before mid-summer), the FAA will allow pilots trained in simulators to move into positions with zero hours of actual on-board aircraft training.

"Zero hours (of cockpit training) is possible now," said Estridge. "We have the technology — we have had it since July of 1971 — to do it now, but FAA hasn't given its final approval."

Actually, it has already been done with full FAA approval as part of a carefully controlled and monitored study involving a number of pilots from several airlines.

The first time came shortly before 6 p.m. on Oct. 18, 1977, when Robert Ladd climbed into the captain's seat of a four-engine Boeing 707 with more than 80 passengers aboard at the American Airlines terminal at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport for a flight to Phoenix.

Ladd was a B-727 captain who had been flying as first officer, the co-pilot, in the 707 and was upgrading to captain of the larger four-engine airliner.

He had not trained as a 707 captain in the actual aircraft — not even an hour. All of his training was in a simulator. He had, however, flown the 707 as a co-pilot.

"We all get qualms about doing something for the first time," said Ladd in a recent interview here. "But there weren't any problems at all. Everything was smooth."

Basing much of its decision on the results of the study in which Ladd and other volunteer airline pilots took part, the FAA will soon allow all training to be done in certain approved simulators.

Transition training is when a pilot moves from one kind of aircraft to another, upgrading is when a flight crew member moves to a higher spot in the same aircraft and recurrent training is the semiannual schooling airline pilots receive to sharpen their skills and be brought up to date on new procedures and equipment.

For several years, the average training time in the actual aircraft has been about one and one-half hours at American, United and several other airlines with extensive simulator training programs.

Computer-controlled simulators, looking much like awkward tarantulas from the outside, can do things that can never be done in the nation's passenger liners.

A flight instructor on a real airplane can put one engine at idle and tell the pilot being trained that it is on fire or malfunctioning but that doesn't have the needed realism.

Right away the trainee-pilot has had the problem diagnosed for him and that detracts from the real world situations he will face.

In the simulator cockpit, the flight instructor has a 20-button panel before him with which he can create a whole series of combinations of weather and flight conditions to give the pilot repeated experience with how to deal with various problems.

FAA regulations for sub-

Simulated cockpit conditions help pilots experience flight crises and learn to deal effectively with them.

stituting the simulator for an aircraft provide that the machine must be a six-axis model. That means it must accurately re-create the aircraft pitch, roll, yaw, heave (an up and down motion), acceleration and deceleration.

These simulators are so realistic that "you can work up a pretty good sweat on it," said Capt. Ed Davidson, a 25-year veteran pilot with American.

"You can lose contact with reality and believe you're really in that situation," said Davidson.

"It's very, very realistic. ... But I think that one or two landings should be done in the actual aircraft, for depth perception practice," he said.

Although what the pilots see through the cockpit windshield is realistic, particularly the night scenes, the FAA — and the airlines — want improvements developed for daytime operations and the industry is working toward that end.

"We can't do G forces in the simulator, either," said

E.N. McKittick, director of flight training operations at the massive United Airlines training center in Denver. "We don't feel that it's that important in the airline industry," he said. G forces are the pull of gravity that are a major part of high-performance military flying.

Traffic jams are a daily occurrence for the thousands of West End residents who commute to work.

Computers keep an eye on commuters

By KAREN ALTMAN
Staff Writer

When West End commuters are stuck in a traffic jam day after day, it's a little difficult for them to imagine anyone is concerned about their plight.

But every day, from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m., a small crew in downtown Los Angeles monitors traffic flow on every major freeway in the Los Angeles basin.

The crew — made up of Caltrans employees and California Highway Patrol officers — works out of the Traffic Operations Center in the Department of Transportation building at 120 S. Spring St.

With the help of computers, the crew is able to determine traffic flow at any given moment. Whenever something out of the ordinary occurs, the proper agency is called out to clean up the problem as quickly as possible, lights flash. When traffic slows to 20 to 25 mph, yellow lights appear. Anything slower triggers a red light.

The computer is hooked up to electromagnetic sensors built into the roadway. The sensors are set off by cars driving over them.

"The sensors relay not only traffic flow, but to a very accurate degree the number of vehicles passing over the roadway," said Russell.

The computer is not used to spot the speed of an individual vehicle, Russell said. "All we're concerned with here is traffic flow. When we see a disruption, we call our communication center and roll a unit if one hasn't already been dispatched."

Allowances are made for regular traffic jams that occur during early morning and late afternoon commute hours. Red lights regularly appear along the western portion of Interstate 10 (the Santa Monica Freeway).

What the Traffic Operations Center does is manage traffic rather than simply respond to accidents, said Russell.

"Obviously, if you can clear accidents sooner by application of good management techniques, the entire (freeway) system benefits. Delays are shortened and secondary accidents are decreased."

The center is mainly concerned with major incidents, such as totally blocked freeways, overturned trucks or multi-car collisions.

"We're looking for something of the duration that will allow (Caltrans) trucks to respond to divert traffic to other routes," said Russell.

Representatives from Caltrans' engineering and maintenance departments staff the center. When an accident occurs, a "major response team" is dispatched.

"When we have an incident that is going to block two or more lanes of traffic for two or more hours, we send out a crew in a sign truck to manage traffic," said Bob Zimowski, senior transportation engineer for Caltrans.

Since both agencies are concerned with the orderly movement of traffic, it's logical to team up Caltrans and the CHP, said Zimowski.

"Most incidents require various response teams. It takes our maintenance people for clean-up and the CHP, fire department and local police for rescue and enforcement," he said.

In addition to the light board, the CHP-Caltrans crew monitors a closed-circuit TV camera perched on a sign above Highway 101 near downtown Los Angeles. More cameras are scheduled to be installed, mostly on Interstate 10 heading toward Santa Monica.

The Traffic Operations Centers maintains close contact with radio stations and other media. When a traffic tie-up is spotted, a Sigalert is sent out along with information about the incident. (Example: Overturned truck on Interstate 10 near Arlington Avenue. No. 1 and No. 2 lanes blocked.)

What's being done to ease "ordinary" traffic jams, the kind commuters have to put up with twice a day, every day?

The most heavily traveled freeway section in the Los Angeles basin is a 42-mile loop bordered by Interstate 405 (the San Diego Freeway), Interstate 10 (the Santa Monica Freeway) and Highway 11 (the Harbor Freeway). On an average day, 555,000 vehicles pass through this triangle.

Much of the traffic increase is attributed to cars belonging to commuters coming from Orange County and the West End, said the CHP's Vic Cuadra.

Traffic jams occur because so many people work the same hours every day — the standard 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. shift, said Lt. Russell. "They all hit the freeway at the same time — you have a mass exodus," he said.

A partial solution, he said, is the installation of ramp metering systems. More than 400 on-ramps in the Los Angeles area are equipped with meters, which are familiar red-yellow-green traffic signals that allow only one car at a time onto the freeway at peak hours.

"The overall plan calls for something like 1,000 ramps to be metered," said Russell. "When you have 20 cars jumping on the freeway all at once, you're going to have a traffic jam. But when one at a time goes on, the flow is not disrupted."

The 10-second wait between cars may irritate some drivers, but they're better off, he added. The extra 10 seconds may save 10 or more.

(A person who runs a red metering light is guilty of the same violation as running a regular traffic light.)

A number of freeways are equipped with bypass lanes for "high occupancy vehicles" — carpools or buses. The lanes are separate from regular traffic lanes. This eliminates problems such as those that occurred on the old "diamond lane" on Interstate 10. That project only lasted four months in 1976, because it was too easy special lane, which was the fast lane of the freeway.

The operating budget of the Traffic Operations Center is approximately $450,000 per year, according to Caltrans' Zimowski. The program more than pays for itself, he and Russell said. Quicker accident clean-up saves fuel — not to mention the frayed tempers.

This crisis affects every marriage and the domestic life of all of us in general. This workshop at Saint Mark's aims to give all those who attend an opportunity to see their own marriages in light of the emerging paradigm of marriage which is all around them. It promises to be deeply moving, relaxing and enjoyable.

The workshop will be led by a panel of authorities in the field of marriage, counseling and psychology. Not far from West End cities is a good place to escape crowds

Summer's here and the outdoors is the place to be. The problem with Southern California, however, is that often too many people want to be at the same place at the same time.

For West End residents there is a solution just around the corner — and north a few miles.

For those who love to hike, the San Gabriel Mountains offer a perfect chance to get away for a day. A favorite spot is Cucamonga Canyon which lies just north of the Upland-Rancho Cucamonga border.

The canyon offers hikers a flowing creek, vertical rock formations and cooling shade trees. Its source lies at the base of a sheet of granite that rises more than 8,000 feet above sea level.

Fray Jose Maria Zalvida was one of the first white men to see the canyon when he passed through the area in 1806.

Later Indians, driven off the land by Spaniards, sought refuge in the canyon.

Cattle raids were eventually launched from there on the herds that roamed the area.

When agriculture became an important part of the area's economy, water was drawn from the canyon for irrigation.

A refreshing pool offers refuge on a hot day for swimmers. Gaylene Wilson of Upland, left, and Barbara Bland of Ontario paddle to shore with their dog Kayak.

Outdoor recreation, mainly hiking and swimming, has become a popular pastime with visitors.

The main hiking trail splits approximately two miles northwest of Sapphire Street and leads into the Cucamonga Wilderness. One trail winds down into the canyon itself where tumbling water can be seen rushing through narrow rock formations. The other trail skirts the base of Cucamonga and Ontario peaks and ends up near Lytle Creek.

The Cucamonga Wilderness is approximately 8,000 acres. Visitors are reminded to get a permit from the Mt. Baldy or Lytle Creek ranger stations before venturing into the area.

During high fire-hazard periods, hikers and campers should check fire regulations before entering the wilderness, according to forestry service spokesman Bill Woodland.

A good rule of thumb is to remember that campfires are allowed without a permit in designated campgrounds. In campgrounds off the main trail, permits are generally required for fires.

Since it is summer, ranger Eric McCormick advises hikers to remember suntan lotion.

"Sunburn is a great hazard up there," he said. "The air is thinner and you're exposed to more of the sun's rays."

Although rattlesnakes are generally afraid of hikers and campers, McCormick recommends a snakebite kit be part of one's supplies when going into the wilderness.

"But people should be more leary of insect bites," Woodland said. "The snakes are present and they are out right now but they generally will avoid campers."

He advised hikers to check with their doctor if they have previously experienced reactions to insect bites.

And despite the fact that water is present in Cucamonga Canyon, it is not always nearby in adjacent wilderness areas. Woodland urged all hikers to carry an ample supply of water.

There is a whole new world awaiting discovery by those who take the time to venture into wilderness areas. Woodland said hikers will be able to see big horn sheep, deer, an occasional bear and possibly a golden eagle.

From one point above Mt. Baldy, hikers can look north and see the Mojave Desert then look south to see the entire Los Angeles Basin.

A trip into the San Gabriel Mountain is a perfect way to get away from the crowded life of Southern California but there are pitfalls to hiking in the wilderness.

For the more adventurous, there's cliff-diving. Don Diederich, left, and Richard Sloss, both of Upland, get ready to hit the water after a 20-foot jump.

Woodland recalled a recent incident in which a man was killed after falling over a cliff at night.

"I don't want to give the impression that every hiker is going to get hurt," he said. "It's rugged country up there. People should just use common sense."

Another precaution was given by McCormick.

"Before you go, let someone know where you'll be. Know how to get in touch with somebody if you get into trouble."

Two riders advance on trail that is more suited to horses than the automobile. Steep grade and ruts keep much of the modern age out of Cucamonga's wilderness area.

Pipeline, left, denotes past use of the canyon. Agriculture, once a major industry in the area, drew much of its water from tunnels like this.

Broken pipelines are still visible in the canyon. Meanwhile, concrete pumping station, above, once controlled the waters of Cucamonga Creek.
